Each student's program is administered by the Faculty of Graduate Studies and Research and the academic unit concerned. Each student shall comply with the general regulations, the degree requirements, and any additional requirements of the appropriate academic unit. Academic requirements vary depending on the student's particular academic program.

Non-credit courses (FGSR) are offered to aid in the professional development of our graduate students. These courses are optional and cannot be used to meet the academic requirements of individual graduate programs. Some courses are free, and others are offered on a cost-recovery basis. Students should consult with their thesis supervisor and/or graduate program coordinators before registering in any of these courses.
